Horse-Taming Rarey in London His Ex-hibition at the Alhambra Palace.

The London Times, of the 28th ult., inWe are delighted to present to our readers forms us as follows:

The London Times, of the 28th ult., informs us as follows:

Yesterday afternoon, at two o'clock, Mr. Rarey gave what was termed in the announcements "a grand fashionable morning demonstration of his system" at the Alhambra Palace, Leicester-square, and accordingly at the hour named, the building was densely crowded by an assemblage of spectators of the most fashionable and aristocratic character. Lucky were those who came first, or who had places reserved for them, or were in private boxes; unlucky were those, and among these were some of the most fashionable spectators, who, having neglected to take time by the forelock, were forced to descend into the space below the seats, which is only separated from the arena in which the exhibition takes place by a low rim or coping of stone. However, at a few minutes past two, Mr. Rarey made his appearance with a laudable punctuality which might well be imitated by many of his patrons of either sex, who would thus escape the mutually painful process of trampling over the feet of those who have already taken their places.

After explaining the general principles of his system, Mr. Rarey introduced the first object of his dexterous manipulation in the shape of a very handsome light chestnut horse, whose good breeding and good temper rendered him a great object of commiseration, especially with the fairer part of the spectators. This docile example having been disposed of, the real business of the day began with a less well-bred animal, and one certainly of much less amiable temper. This was a dark chestnut mare whom no man had yet groomed, and whose furious kicking had battered her hind legs to pieces. Retween this vicious beast and Mr. Rarey a most determined struggle now began. After plunging and kicking in every possible position, the animal gradually gave way to Mr. Rarey's inimitable skill and courage, and lay on her, side in the straw in the arena. After demonstrating her tameness in the usual way, not it must be owned, without much misgiving on the part of those who

Now the spectators breathed more freely, and tkought the battle over. Not so; "Xantippe" made up her mind for another bout, snorted, plunged, and threw up her heels most furlously. Fortunate was it for an elderly gentleman down in the space beforementioned, below the seats, that those heels fell on the rim of stone, and not on his skull. As it was, the "Volscians" were considerably "fluttered" at the sharp crack, and many thought that the brains of the elderly gentleman—always supposing that a man who could lean his head on a low coping within reach of such a vicious pair of heels, had any brains at all—had been scattered. While all this was passing—the work of a moment or two—Mr. Rarey had dismounted with the greatest agility, restrapped "Xantippe's" fore leg, and begun the battle again. We need scarcely add that this second struggle was of short duration, and that the animal was led off, at last, perfectly tamed. ow the spectators breathed more freely,

THE INCLUMENT SEASON IN PARIS.-The Paris correspondent of the New Orleans Delta observes:

Delta observes:

There is great distress in town. The dry goods people, the mantua-makers, the miliners, the straw-workers, the flower-makers, are all of them suffering greatly from the inclemency of the season. The public balls and gardens are almost ruined, even the laundresses complain of the cold weather: the former are unfrequented, and the latter possess none of that affluence of cotton and linen clothes which usually banish warmer and less-easily soiled attire from the daily dress. A great many people are thrown out of employment by this cold weather from all of the above-mentioned trades. And while there is no work, and consequently no wages, every thing at market is very dear; the poorer classes are eating scarcely any thing except dried peas and dried beans. There is, too, a great deal of sickness and a good deal of mortality in fowa—throat diseases, swelling rtality in fown—throat diseases, swelling the glands of the neck abound, and there there is talk of new taxes as likely to be in-flicted upon us: Paris wants a lean of $30,-000,000 to build and pull down during the coming months. If the present weather con-tinues a few weeks longer, we shall see the strength of the Government severely tested.

A MODEL INDIAN NATION .- The Choctaw Nation seems to be a model community, ac cording to the following usages:

cording to the following usages:

All lands, it is said, are held in common, and each Indian, or those connected with him by affinity or consanguinity, settle down, and no one is allowed to come nearer than one-quarter of a mile of this inclosurer and this is his claim, and he is protected in its possession by the laws of the Nation, as though it were his fee-simple. Merchants, mechanics, professional men, machinists, &c., are allowed to live there by permit from the Council, but no one is allowed to produce any thing more than is necessary for the use of himself and his family outside of his trade or profession. Not a drop of spirituous liquors is allowed to be given away, or transported through the nation; and all that is found by the officers is poured out, and if found in any wagon, water craft, or on horseand in any wagon, water craft, or on horse-ack, the whole establishment is confiscated

A female acquaintance died, as women some times do, suddenly. Sister G. was mournfully exercised on this subject; de-scribed the symptoms, and told the manner of her death; concluding the painful narra-tive with the announcement of this new diffi-culty which will runt to the test the talents culty, which will put to the test the talents of the "faculty." She had the dropsy, the doctor said, "but all to once her victuals struck to her heart, and she died right off."

ENTHUSIASM FOR GARIBALDI.—A letter from ENTHURIASM FOR GARBALDI.—A letter from Genoa, in giving an account of the departure of several vessels laden with volunteers, arms, and stores, for Garibaldi, states that, as an instance of the enthusiasm of the population, eighty boatmen, who had been engaged to embark the cargo of the abovementioned vessels, unanimously refused to accept any remuneration, and all the others, 160 in number, on learning what was to be done, earnestly desired to take part in the work on the same condition.

A New Frence Head Dress.—The ladies of the south of France have introduced a new head dress—a little tartan cap, somewhat similar to that worn by the Spanish dancers, when castingts tumbourines and the like when castinets, tambourines and the like were in vogue at the theaters. With these little bennets, which cover only the top of the head, the hair is gathered in a net on the neck. They are quite becoming to pretty women; but the homely fight rather shy of them as yet.

MAZZINI IN DUSQUIES.—Madame Mario, formerly Mrs. Jessie White, was one of the passengers on board the Washington, off Cagliari. With her are two individuals, carefully relied, and it is rumored that one of these mysterious personages was none other than Mazzini in disguise.

the following article, from the Child's Paper, svincing a subtle insight into the ways of Providence, and showing how terribly He deals with all who dare to violate His most holy laws. Any one who can read this with out feeling its deep and impressive truth, must, indeed, be given up to the reprobate sense, and destined to live without God in the world: You have heard of the famous big ship built in London, called the Great Eastern built in London, called the Great Eastern. Four thousand passengers they meant her to carry, the people of four or five of our small villages could be stowed in her. She was built of the best material, by the best mechanics. But unfortunately, they put one rotten plank in her—that was Subbalk work.

After she was built they had great difficulty in launching her. They pushed her, and hauled her, and tugged at her for weeks together, with all the men and machinery at their command. Stir she did not. One, two, three, four, five times they tried to launch the monster. A good many mistakes were their command. Stir she did not. One, two, three, four, five times they tried to launch the monster. A good many mistakes were made, she was so much larger than any ship ever built before; but the worst mistake of all was a Sabbath launching at last. The God of the Sabbath appointed it for a day of sacred rest; and will He not frown on those who abuse it to their own uses?

Just as the launch was effected, its great constructor, Mr. Brunel, died—died of overwork, they said. Ah, God knew his poor brain needed Sabbath rest, if he did not know it. After the launch, the great ship steamed off on its trial trip. The eyes of all England were looking on her. Pens wrote her praises, and lips pronounced her a success. But what was the first news they heard from her on this trial trip? A terrible explosion on board. That rotten plank, perhaps, had given way. The poor ship was hurried into port. While there, with no urgent necessity for it, her captain ordered her huge decks to be cleaned on the Sabbath. The hands asked for the Christian privilege of rest on the Lord's Day. And what answer did they get? Arrest and imprisonment for disobeying orders. A few months later, and we find the death of that captain by accidental drowning.

And the end of all this is, that the Great

And the end of all this is, that the Great fastern, upon which her builders prided nemselves so much is likely to turn out a ad bargain to all concerned—a wreck on hore. We call these disasters "accidents;" but depend upon it, there is a Power over and above all that we can see, whose laws, which the has made for our good, it, is perilous to trifle with. This Being is Lord of the Sab-

The Carange at the Battles of the Late Franco-Austrian War. A correspondent of the New York Times vrites in a late letter:

It has already been shown by a document published at Brescia by the chief Italian surgeon of the place, that the accidents at Solferine on the Allied side, which entered for treatment at the hospital of Brescia alone, were a little over 31,000; if to this be added the men, who entered the hospitals of other were a little over 31,000; if to this be added the men who entered the hospitals of other towns and villages, those who had wounds which did not drive them into the hospitals (and the hospitals on account of the intense heat were avoided by every one who could nurse his wound in camp), and the dead left on the field, we arrive inevitably at a figure approximating 45,000-or about one-fourth of the entire army, not more than five-eighths of which were engaged. Dr. Bertherand, one of the principal surgeons of the French army, Director of the Medical School at Algiers, and chief surgeon to one of the corps d'armee in the late Italian campaign, has just published a small work of 200 pages on the surgical service of the campaign.

In this work Dr. Bertherand states that the effective force of the French army in

In this work Dr. Bertherand states that the effective force of the French army in Italy had reached, on the day of the battle of Solferino, 218,000 men, and he gives the same figures as the Breseis surgeon, as the number of wounded who entered the hospitals of that town afterward, to-wit: "More than 17,000 French, 14,000 Italians, and about 1,500 Austrians (12), 2000 men." than 17,000 French, 14,000 Italians, and about 1,500 Austrians—total, 33,000 men." He further says, "that from the 6th of June to the 17th of August, a period which comprised the evacuations from Magenta, Malegnano and Solferino, the hospitals of Milan received in round numbers, 21,000 French, 6,000 Italians, and 7,000 Austrians—total, 34,000." These figures embrace also those attacked with any serious disorder, such for 34,000." These figures embrace also those attacked with any serious disorder, such for example as typhoid fever but the army was remarkably healthy during the whole campaign, and every man not attacked with an absolutely grave disorder, was treated outside; so that the entries from this cause were insignificant. The reader will observe in regard to the statistics at Milan, that while all, or nearly all, of the wounded of Magenta and Malegnano were carried there, but a certain proportion of those from Solferino are comprised in the number. As a last observation, the officers and very many of the privates who had friends in the country, were treated in private houses.

A HORSE-THIEF HANGED BY A MOB .- The Washington (Iowa) Press, of late date, re-

Marks:

On the night of the 21st of April a horse was stolen from Allen Meek, of this County, two or three miles north of Washington. The thief, Martin T. Wright, made his escape, but was tracked by a brother of Mr. Meek, to the vicinity of St. Joseph, Mo. Here the thief had disposed of the horse, and shortly stole a pair of mules, in which he was detected, and fully identified as the rogue whe had stolen the horse from this county A meeting of the citizens was held, and the was detected, and fully identified as the rogue who had stolen the horse from this county. A meeting of the citizens was held, and the thief tried and sentenced to be hung. A committee was sent with him into the woods for the purpose of lynching him, or extorting a confession. After one or two swings at the rope, he confessed to stealing the mules and a number of other animals, among them the one from Mr. Meek. He was taken down, and 120 hashes administered to him, and put in jail at St. Joseph. From jail, however, he escaped the second night, through the sid of accomplies outside, letting out at the same time four or five other prisoners. Crawling into a freight-car on the Hannibal without being discovered. In a few hours after his arrival he stole another horse and started south, but had not gone more than twenty miles before he was overtaken and brought back, and identified by men from St. Joseph, as the same person who had been lashed there a few days previous, and escaped from their jail. He was then taken out and hung till dead.

ODD FREAK OF NOMENCLATURE.-By an odd ODD FREAK OF NOMENCLATURE.—By an odd freak of nomenclature, the regiment of cavalry—lancers—dispatched from Naples by sea to Calabria, has embarked on the screw frigate Roberto Guiscardo, which reminds folks of how quickly Garibaldi's prototype, the gallant Norman, arriving with only lifteen vigorous followers, conquered Apalia, the Calabrias, and Sicily, giving to Norman hardihood an example which, a few years afterward, William the Bastard copied in England, and Strongbow in Ireland.

A PATIBLE'S DISTINCTION AS TO BLEEDING. A physician thus addressed a surgeon, while in their patient's chamber: "You must not forget to phiebotomize the old gentleman tomorrow" "I won't suffer it!" cried the sick man in a fright. "Don't be alarmed, sir," neplied the surgeon, "the doctor orders you to be bled." "Oh, as for the bleeding," replied he, that matters little; but as for the other, I would sooner die than endure it."

If there is any one thing perplexingly annoying to house-keepers, tis "help." If there is any one thing almost makes me wish I was never born a woman, and had a house to keep, tis "help." If there is any one thing calculated to shorten my existence, and bring my gray hairs with sorrow to a hotel, 'tis "help." I have tried every nation, kind, and character—all sorts, ages, sizes and descriptions, but 'tis of no use, they are all alike. Instead of helping you to do the work, they help to make work for you to do; they help themselves to the best bits in the kitchen, help their friends to your eggs, coffee, tea, and small stores, help their company to your cakes and wine, help themselves from your wardrobe, and one I had a short time since, helped herself liberally to my little gold dollars. Garibaldi was quiet. The reported concession by the King of Naples had determined him to precipitate annexation to Sardinia. It is reported that the King of Sardinia declines alliance with Naples, but Napoleon urges due consideration of the Neapolitan overtures.

are nover clean, and the table never half set. She can cook very nicely if she likes, but her head appears to me to be eternally running on the young men. She is a fine-looking girl, and there is not an evening in the week that she is not off to some place of amusement, or that some caller does not waste our gas till midnight. She must have sleep, and, consequently, I have to get out of bed to arouse her in the morning.

I must give her ample notice, or ten to one she is off before I can get my things on, snd stay at home I must, for there is no one with whom to leave the baby. To be sure, Mary is an excellent girl, and very attentive, but she is small and delicate, and I dare not trust her with so much responsibility. First, our she is small and delicate, and I dare not trust her with so much responsibility. First, our Dutch groceryman fell in love with Therese; be promised her a brick house to live in, with every imaginable comfort, and gas too. He was neither very young nor remarkably handsome, but was pretty well off, and she was on the point of "deceiving" him when along comes the camphene man, much younger and better looking, and lager-beer and cheese had to give place to one-dollar-and-twenty-cents-a-gallon. What a row that kicked up! For weeks, lager-beer besieged our house, vowing revenge, and the atmosphere was weighty with the aroma of faderland.

phere was weighty with the aroma of faderland.

Camphene had it all his own way for some time, but Therese is now inconsolable, consequently more careless, because he can not wed for two years. In my opinion, he is a mean, contemptible sneak. I believe it was all a business operation on his part, for Therese says he talked "love in a cottage and camphene burners," till we had the gas put on. I really do not know what to do. If she does not do better and keep things cleaner, I must discharge her, and that would grieve me immensely, for I might get a worse one. If Freddie gets elected for the Legislature next year, I intend to make him introduce a bill creating the office of "help inspectoress," the Governor's wife to appoint the oldest old maid in the country.

Remarkable Literary Theft by Alexandre

Not long ago, Barnes & Burr, of New York Notions ago, names & Burr, of New York, published an interesting Life of Garibaldi, written by himself, with aketches of his companions in arms, translated by his friend and admirer, Theodore Dwight. This biography, it appears by the following extract from the Philadelphia Press, has been stolen by that most unscrupulous of literary hacks, Alexandre Dumas:

"Some months ago, the famous Alexandre."

"Some months ago the famous Alexandre Dumas, author of Monte Cristo, The Three Musketeers, and an immense number of other romances, proceeded to Italy, with the avowed purpose of becoming the biographer of Garibaldi. He issued a flaming prospectus of his forthcoming work, in which it was announced that it would contain a great many details received directly from Garibaldi himself. An American publisher (who may be heard of in Boston, we are told,) conceived the business-like idea of purchasing advance sheets of Dumas's Life of Joseph Garibaldi, and succeeded in obtaining a copy of the work in anticipation of its appearance in Paris. Jomas author of Monte Cristo The Three

"It is said that $500 was the sum paid to Dumas—certainly not a very extravagant amount, but a great deal, considering that the book might have been obtained immediately after its publication for nothing.

"The advanced sheets, duly received from France, were immediately placed in the hands of a competent translator, and the Boston publisher prepared to bring out the book with as little delay as possible. But, by the time the first twenty-four pages were translated, a careful 'reader,' well acquainted translated, a careful 'reader,' well acquainted with 'current literature,' went over them, and speedily discovered that Dumas had simply got some one to make a French translation of Garibald's Autobiography, edited by Dwight, and published by Barnes & Burr, prefixing a few prefatory remarks of his own to this stolen property. Of course the translation of Dumas's Life of Garibald's was not proceeded with, and we need scarcely add that the publisher, so scandalously cheated by Dumas, has not the slightest chance of ever receiving back even a fraction of his $500."

A RUSSIAN OPINION OF THE PAPAL ARMY. The St. Petersburg Gazette makes the followng remarks on the Papal army:

History relates that the inhabitants of a great city of antiquity conceived the idea of seeking for a material means of reaching Heaven, which was morally impossible for them. For that purpose they commenced the building of a colossal tower, but suddenly found that they all spoke-different languages. This confusion of tongues rendered the continuation of the work impossible, and the men, no longer understanding one another, dispersed in all directions. The Papal Government is of opinion that the above example is not applicable under all circumstances, and thinks that, though the confusion of tongues prevented the construction of the tower of Babel, it can not be an obstacle to the reestablishment of the power of the Pope in Romagna, and it therefore continues to recruit its army by vagabonds from every quarter of the world. How will these many-countried warriors fight? That is somewhat difficult to predict. They have only yet fought once, and that was among themselves, when they took each other for the volunteers of Zambianchi, defeated long before their arrival by the gondarmes of Pimodan. If we may believe Archbishop Cullen, each Irishman is worth twenty soldiers, and, if we judge of all the elements of the Pontifical army according to the same proportions, there is nothing so autonishing in the Cavour Ministry, with 200,000 men, being so much alarmed at the 25,000 Papal heroes.

A VOLUNTEER CORPS IN IRELAND.—At a meeting held in Dublin, a Committee was formed, "who shall endeavor, by every legal and constitutional means, to obtain the consent of the government to the organization of volunteer corps in Ireland."

The London Builder of late date remarks:

We once spoke of the voices of old buildings. The thoughtful wayfarer in this great city can not fail to be impressed with the varied and peculiar sounds which form one of the peculiarities of this teeming city, and which mingle together and produce a voice singularly impressive. It may be heard with solemn effect sounding in the dome of St. Paul's, and less loudly, though distinct, in still weather, in quiet nocks in the suburbs.

When the varied materials which compose this mighty voice are considered, the mind becomes bewildered in the contemplation of what for more than 2,000 years has been constantly increasing, and now includes the mingled tones of nearly 3,000,000 people. presences in churches and chapets, professors and lecturers are busy; and missionsaries, who in certain districts are as greatly needed as they are in the Sandwich Islands, zealously labor; while lawgivers, judges and magistrates, who dispense laws, and the crowd of counsel, exercise their important functions. The mallet of the sculptor; the more homely but useful working of the stonemason; the hammering of the carpenter, and the chipping of the bricklayer; even the quick tapping of the tofin-maker, all play their part in the city voice. Music and minstrelsy, the hoarse voice of street-traders are there; in banks and counting-houses the chinking of gold adds a low but important sound. Go where you may additions are made to the voice. tions in it. The language of most civilized nations and the music of sunny lands may be detected.

In a street is Bloomsbury, a few hours ago, we heard the peculiar note of the Italian bagpipe. Soom a group of shepherds of the Abruzzi came in sight, performing the dance of their native district. Singular was the contrast with all around; dusky black hats, trimmed with searlet ribbons, glittering silver crosses and other ornaments; closely-fitting coats of sheepskin, with the hair turned outward; knee-breeches of bright glossy green, like the breast of a peacock; goatskin wallets and water-bottles, the legs covered with leathern sandals; the primitive bag-pipe, formed of goatskin, together with swartay countenances and coal-black heir, presented a curious picture, the more remarkable from the circumstance that the costume has remained unchanged for more than a thousand years. The old Romans, whose edigies are in the musuum hard by, have listened to the same piping; and so the peat is wedded to the same piping; and so the peat is wedded to the present; and a note of sound, one component of the mighty voice of London, suggests a long train of thought, and makes the world populous with the dead.
